

I have been asked the following question a lot lately, by phone, email or in person.

“Where can I find good gold?”

First off I do not know of any bad gold.

Seriously this is a question I have pondered myself. Where can we go to find gold?

In the old days I have heard you could walk down a path in certain areas and pick up gold with little more effort than bending the knees. Now those days are not gone but I have not located an area like that, yet, when I do I will be sure to let everyone know, (after I pick up all the gold that is). Today it requires a lot of work, digging holes, processing dirt one way or another or hours of walking with a metal detector and then digging holes.

I have asked some very serious gold seekers and finders their method of finding gold.

First and foremost to all them is research, research and more research. Look and study via maps, internet, library or whatever is your choice and find areas that gold has been found in before. See the lay of the land the composition of the dirt and then see if the area is open to search for minerals. If the land is open the only way you will know for sure is to travel to that area get out of your car and sample, sample and sample some more, other words dig holes.

So where can you find gold good or bad. Not on our couch at home for sure, out in the wilds digging holes is my best guess.

By the way do not forget to fill in all the holes you dig.

Special note to our members; if you want to find gold you are going to have to come out with us and dig holes. Do some research, find an area that gold could be found in and let's go; maybe just maybe we will find good gold. I do know one thing; waiting for others to lead us to the promised gold is not going to happen. So the choice is yours. If you want to find gold you are going to have to get off the couch and get out there digging holes. Besides fresh air, exercise and good friends will cure all that ails you.
